There are many cliques on Wall St. Some are cheesy, but most are dead-on accurate and should not be ignored. You've probably heard most of them. "The trend is your friend." "Don't fight the Fed."

One that doesn't get a lot of press but is at the heart of how I operate is: "There's a bull market somewhere."

It's true. Unless the market is in a free fall, there are always a handful of groups out-performing while almost everything else does a little better or a little worse than the market.

A bull market right now can be found in the commodity space. In particular, oil has been surging.

Crude has rallied > 60% off its February low, and many oil stocks have posted massive gains.

This is where the bull market has been. This is where your money has needed to be to achieve out-sized returns.

At Leavitt Brothers, we identify the best-performing groups, and then we dig into those groups and find the best trading opportunities.

Here are many of the oil stocks we posted for our subscribers over the last two months. Most of these were official set-ups posted on our Long List. A few were posted on our Message Board.

Trading is not easy, but it can be made easier by finding the bull market – there's one somewhere.

This is what we do at Leavitt Brothers. The indexes can chop and churn and make little progress, but we go beneath the surface and find where the bull markets lie.
